WEDNESDAY
OCTOBER 28, 1953

I arose at 6:30 after four hours' sleep and took the train to Metz, which we reached at 11:30. I motored from there about 60 kilometres to Luxembourg and had lunch with Tommy. We did some work at the office and later went to dinner with Sylvia and Jean Monnet. They were both in excellent form, and Jean spent much of the evening showing us various drawings [redacted] he had collected in the past. They are a fascinating couple and almost entirely self-sufficient.
